

1 Non-Yaku Han Scorers

These are features of a hand that provide Han, but do not count as Yaku and themselves cannot make a hand valid.

1.1 Dora: 1 Han

At the start of the game one of the tiles on the Dead Wall is revealed as a Dora Indicator. Since the Dead Wall is 7 tiles long, this would look like e.g.

Whichever tile comes after the Dora Indicator is a Dora tile, so in the above example  would be a Dora tile. The sequence loops so if  is the Dora Indicator then  is a Dora tile.

The Honor tiles also have an order, the Wind tiles are in the order of play    . Similarly the Dragon tiles have an order   , but you can remember the sequence alphabetically, green to red to white.

1.2 Kandora: 1 Han

After a player calls Kan, the next tile of the Dead Wall is flipped and becomes another Dora indicator. Continuing from the example above the wall might now show

Which means that  and  are both Dora tiles.

1.3 Akadora: 1 Han

In Riichi Mahjong there are often a set of red 5s. Some sets have one in each suit, and some have one in each except two in the circle suit. These tiles look like   .

1.4 Stacking Dora

One tile can be a Dora tile multiple times, and thus be worth multiple Han. For example, if the Dora Indicators showed then  would be worth 2 Han. Similarly if the Dora Indicator was then  would be worth 2 Han.

2 Yaku

Yaku are features of a hand that provide Han. Importantly a hand needs to have a Yaku in order to be able to win in Riichi Mahjong.

2.1 Riichi: 1 Han

A closed hand in Tenpai can call Riichi, typically the first discard made after calling Riichi is turned sideways. Once in Riichi you cannot change your hand, only drawing a tile and discarding it if it doesn't complete the hand.

2.2 Double Riichi: 2 Han

A Riichi called on the first turn is a Double Riichi.

2.3 Ippatsu: 1 Han

If after calling Riichi you win before your next discard you have this Yaku. Any player making a call (Chii, Pon, Kan) invalidates this Yaku.

2.4 Yakuhai Prevalent Wind: 1 Han

Having a set of 3 of the wind tile that corresponds to the prevalent wind (sometimes called round wind), counts as this Yaku. For example in an east round the following hand has Yakuhai Prevalent Wind:

